"Culture Change in Practice" is our own weblog where people can become involved in a conversation about Culture Change as it is practiced by professionals in real nursing homes. Feel free to join the conversation, or post a comment about something you have learned on your journey.

The ever-tenacious Emi Kiyota is at it again, or should I say, still at it - her passion for improvement of eldercare. You may remember that last summer (see: <http://www.actionpact.com/weblog/2007/07/view-from-sri-lanka.html>) she and some colleagues went to Sri Lanka to help design a new living environment for the local elders. Well, they went back for part two of the project and Emi has once again shared her insight, challenges and learning from the project on her blog (<http://agingincommunityinsrilanka.blogspot.com/>). Think culture change is tough in middle-America? How about trying to change institutional culture in a different culture all together?! From language to landscape, Emi details the trip in candid journal entries and video.
